Excerpt: .and intirmity, or as a means of leisure and independence in the latter part of life, or a help to children in the outsc of it. Savings, however, which have only these ends in view, have not much tendeney to increase the amount of capital permanently in existence. These motives only prompt persons to save at one period of life what they purpose to consume at another, or what will be consumed by their children before they can compltely provide for themselves. The savings by which an addition is made to the national capital, usually emanate from the desire of persons to improve what is termed their condition in life, or to make a provision for children or others, independent of their exertions. Now, to the strength of these inclinations it makes a very material difference how much of the desired object can be...
